Instructions

As always, printing on card stock or sturdy paper and laminating will greatly extend the life of these cards. Four cards are printed on each page. I have included both color and black and white versions for your convenience. Answer keys and student checklists are provided for both versions.

Note:

The color and black and white sets are identical.

Task Card Activity Ideas

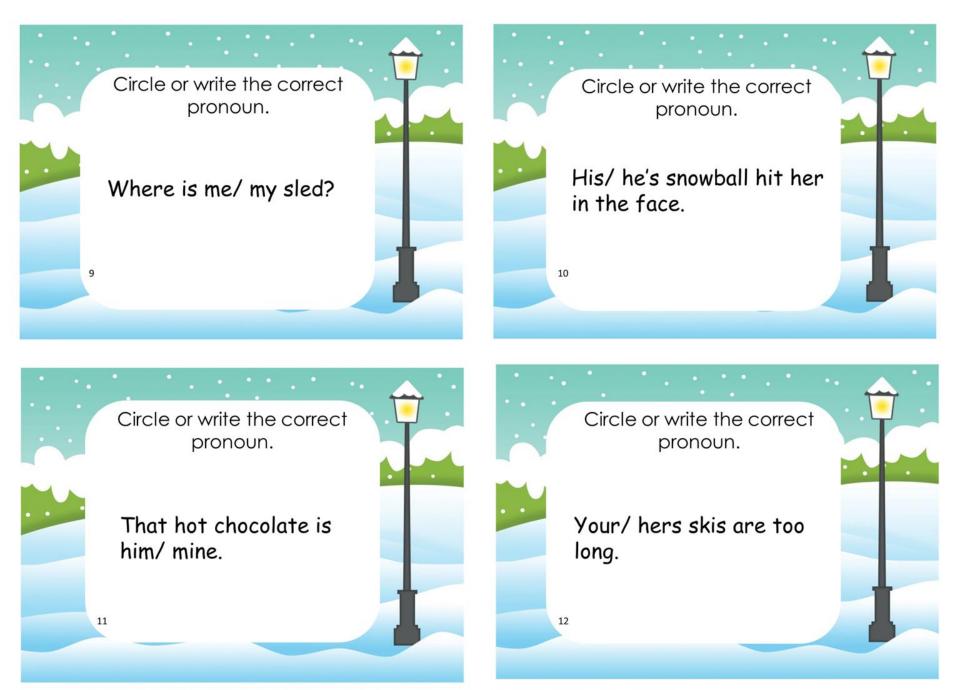

These can be used as an early finisher task, by simply having them available with your early finisher tasks. When a student has a bit of extra time, he or she can select a few cards and answer them on the provided checklist.

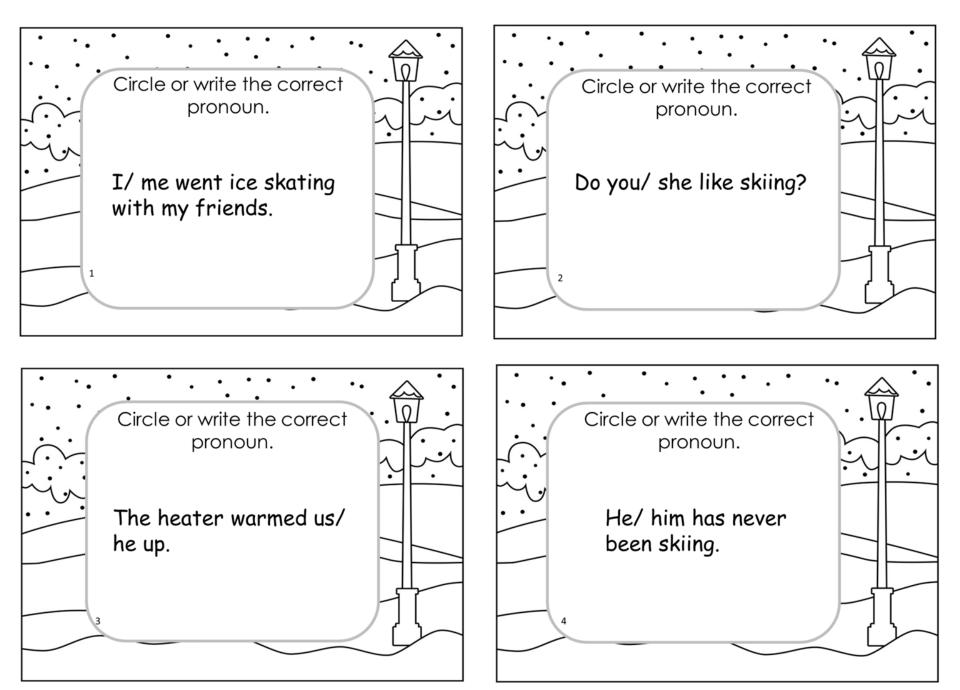

You can use them as a group review, by giving each group a stack (or complete deck) and having them work as a team to complete the checklist. The team with the most correct answers wins. In case of a tie, speed will be a tiebreaker.

Scoot is another fun game with task cards, especially when the weather keeps your students inside all day. To play, give each student a checklist and place one card at each desk. Students begin at their own desk and answer the card placed in front of them. Every 30 seconds (more or less, depending on their reading and writing speed), ring a bell and students move to the next seat. If it is their first time playing Scoot, go over the seat rotation order before beginning, so students can move as quickly as possible with minimum confusion.
